KEY RISKS AND RISK MANAGEMENT

You should not invest in this Fund if you do not understand or are not comfortable with the accompanying risks.

Credit Risk/Default Risk. The possibility for an investor to experience losses due to a borrower's failure to pay principal and/or interest in a timely manner on instruments such as bonds, loans, or other forms of security which the borrower issued.

Reinvestment Risks. The risk associated with the possibility of having lower returns or earnings when maturing funds or the interest earnings of funds are reinvested.

Interest Rate Risk. This is the possibility for an investor to experience losses due to changes in interest rates.

Inflation Risk. The risk that the value of investment is lower than the rate by which the prices of goods and services go up.

Liquidity Risk. The possibility for an investor to experience losses due to the inability to sell or convert assets into cash immediately or in instances where conversion to cash is possible but at a loss.

- The Fund implements a risk management policy that applies the principles of Value-at-Risk (VaR) and Modified Duration. VaR is defined as a statistical estimate of the amount of loss that an "open" risk position is unlikely to exceed during a given time period with a given level of confidence. Modified Duration is a means to measure the change in the value of a security in response to a change in interest rates. The formula is used to determine the effect that a 1% change in interest rates will have on the price of the bond.
- The Fund's investment outlets have been subject to proper screening and evaluation in accordance with LANDBANK –TBG's accreditation process and minimum regulatory requirements.

REDEMPTION CONDITIONS

FUND MANAGER'S REPORT

The general direction of interest rates reversed in 2Q2021 after bond investors apparently bought the Federal Reserve's narrative that the recent spike in U.S. inflation was just transitory and that the price ascent would not persist through year-end. Fed Chairman Powell contended that the higher than expected consumer prices came as a result of low base effects rather than a broad-based increase in aggregate demand. Proof of the pudding was that the U.S. economy hasn't reached full employment yet, notwithstanding the successful containment of covid infections and the widespread easing of restrictions. U.S. economic health is not quite fully restored yet and hence, the accommodative U.S. monetary policy will stay in place perhaps until next year, with the first-rate hike probably coming only by 2023. As a result, US yields fell in Q2 by 7.33 bps. This is in stark contrast to the 30.66 bps uptick in US yields in Q1. Consequently, local yields followed in the footsteps of their U.S. counterparts. Be that as it may, the long-term view is still for global interest rates to rise. The economic cycle has already turned the corner and transitioned from bust to recovery - not quite the boom yet. But we are gradually getting there and once the Federal Reserve tapers its bond buying program, possibly in 4Q2021 or in the first half of 2022, a long-term bear market for bonds will have been firmly established.

VIEW STRATEGY

There might still be a little window of opportunity to engage in some tactical positioning due to the current downward bias in interest rates. However, given the long-term prospects for global economic recovery, the recent bond rally has limited room to run and could soon peter out. The Federal Reserve could also start to taper its bond buying program by the end of this year or in the first half of next year. Given the foregoing, risk-reward dynamics of tactical positioning at this point might not be attractive. It would be best to work on shortening portfolio duration in anticipation of higher interest rates, going forward.
