FUND MANAGER'S REPORT

A plethora of mixed economic data was churned out by the U.S. in the second quarter of the year adding to the confusion to the already muddled outlook for financial markets. Conflicting reports contributed to heightened volatility. Among these reports, the early part of the quarter saw US job cuts surge by 319 percent and US job openings at near two-year lows; yet, US unemployment remained near all-time lows. Also, US GDP growth was initially estimated to be the slowest in two years. But the final official figure released in June showed quite the opposite. To analysts trying to make sense of the data, these are confounding, to say the least. The only more or less concrete expectation by the market was that the Federal Reserve was supposed to be near the end of its monetary tightening cycle upon reaching its supposed "terminal rate" of 5% for the Federal Funds Rate. Yet, even upon reaching this, core inflation still appeared to be firmly entrenched. This could necessitate more rate hikes by the U.S. central bank.

As a result, the Philippine equities market fluctuated aimlessly, just consolidating within a tight sideways channel between 6,380 and 6,680. And since there are still no significant developments yet that would indicate a breakthrough or a drastic change in outlook, the local bourse could extend its trek within the horizontal channel.

VIEW STRATEGY

Despite a slew of positive earnings reports, corporate results are just getting back to where they were before the pandemic hit. Hence market upside is quite restrained and limited. With the bigger picture still largely abstract, more sideways fluctuation could be expected of the market. Hence, it would be best to buy on weakness near major support levels and sell on strength near major resistance.
