FUND MANAGER'S REPORT

A very inauspicious start greeted 2016 when the Shanghai bourse plunged by 6.9% in the opening day of the year. An atmosphere of doom and gloom immediately pervaded financial markets with bears trumping bulls in a frantic equities sell-off from all corners of the globe. Massive Chinese government intervention failed to stem the tide causing investors to conclude that the world's second largest economy is littered with fundamental economic flaws. Decades of unimpeded double-digit growth rate must have created asset bubbles all over the place. This after China posted its slowest growth rate in 4Q2015, since the global recession in 2009. Indeed, on top of the estimated $1 trillion capital that flowed out of from China in 2015, the month of January saw follow through exodus of hot money. To prevent further depreciation of the Yuan, the People's Bank of China (PBOC) had to shell out another $100 billion in January on top of the $350 billion dispensed from its foreign reserves in the last six months.

And with Europe still in the doldrums, commodity prices continued sinking on very reticent global demand. Incidentally, European banks which are perceived to be exposed heavily with commodity and energy producers got hammered. A period of global deflation is at hand and Central banks do not seem to know how to handle this scenario, which last occurred in the 1930s. The European Central Bank is already out of bullets, so to speak, and can just pretend to still be in control. With this morose global economic backdrop, the Federal Reserve expectedly refrained from raising its key policy rates in the January FOMC meeting.

As for the Philippines, economic growth will most certainly encounter a lot of headwinds. One of the country's economic pillars is sure to take a hit because of low oil prices. With gulf-states grappling with enormous budget deficits, growth in OFW remittances will be very restrained. Fortunately, massive infrastructure spending by the government will be complemented by election spending. This will provide a pump priming effect and should somehow compensate for low remittances. The country will still be one of the fastest growing in the region.

VIEW STRATEGY
