FUND MANAGER'S REPORT

The Federal Reserve followed its deliberate plan raising key policy rates to 2.0 – 2.25% (25bps) in the September FOMC meeting. The move was consistent with market expectations as the backdrop of U.S. economic growth remains strong. While job gains, household spending, and business investment fuel economic activity, risks of capacity constraints and inflation pave the way for another 25 bps hike before the year ends. In the longer policy horizon, forecasts remain unchanged at a median policy rate of 3.4% in 2020.

Locally, the BSP has raised key rates to 4.0-4.5% in a successive tightening streak to curb persistent and broadening price pressures. These pressures driven by supply side factors continue to pose threats to the inflation outlook. In effect, baseline forecasts have shifted higher for both 2018 and 2019. Policy-wise, the BSP executed a total of 150 bps rate hike since May but an extensive assessment placed emphasis on non-monetary policy measures to anchor inflation expectations.

VIEW STRATEGY

The Fund will maximize investment in banks high yielding deposits with best yields. Underweighting exposure in short-dated government securities to protect Fund from volatility due to continuous rates increase.
